

Why you Shouldn't Try to Make the World a Better Place

BROWN BAG SERIES

•
Hoffman Center
for Business Ethics

Friday, April 14th, 12:30 P.M. – 1:45 P.M.

Hybrid Event – Room AAC 254

REGISTRATION for Zoom

<https://bentley.zoom.us/meeting/register/tJYvc-6spz0uGdRP8LAJIBCDNYOaLaBXHnxi>

The road to hell, we're told, is paved with good intentions. The pursuit of happiness, we're told, is self-defeating; aim at happiness directly and the opposite will be your fate. People's most meaningful life experiences are seldom ones they wish repeated. In this talk I propose a unifying explanation of these (and other) seemingly disparate phenomena: one that implies that having a standing disposition to make things better is likely to result in making things worse.

Mikhail Valdman

Associate Professor of Philosophy
Virginia Commonwealth University

BENTLEY UNIVERSITY

Hoffman Center
for Business Ethics