Civility is a virtue. It helps us get along and work together, even when we disagree. Yet our world seems increasingly uncivil, and our employers and colleagues sometimes do things that – we may think – push the bounds of civility. Please join us for a discussion of civility in the workplace. Among the questions we will explore are: What is civility, and what does it require of us? How have post-Covid changes in the workplace environment affected the way we interact with people at work, and what are the ramifications for civility? Should we keep politics out of the workplace for the sake of civility? Or is speaking out on issues of public concern compatible with civility? How are companies managing their public personas, and internal operations, so that civility is maintained? We welcome your questions too.
